Transitcentric Community Strengthening
Community Building in Waterloo Region

Becky Schlenvogt, MUP, AICP, RPP, MCIP

October 15, 2012
A few adjustments for local practices might be in store when Grand River Transit begins service to Elmira April 6.
Central Transit Corridor: a lively, well connected, and inviting corridor that demonstrates excellence in community building.

Over the next 20 years, the Central Transit Corridor will continue to evolve as a place of prosperity and innovation, enhancing connections between the three cities, campuses, and the many communities along the rapid transit line. To achieve this vision, future development and investment should:

- Ensure the corridor is inclusive and well connected, providing residents and visitors a variety of travel options to key destinations throughout the Central Transit Corridor and beyond.
- Enhance and create new public spaces, sustainable development and complete streets; further strengthening Waterloo Region and the Central Transit Corridor.
- Celebrate the unique natural, built and cultural heritage and character of the Corridor’s neighbourhoods, Uptown, the Downtowns, shopping centres, employment districts, technology clusters and main streets, while creating new opportunities to live, work, study, and play.
- Demonstrate excellence and innovation in community building through high quality urban design, creation of meaningful and attractive places and coordinated design and implementation of public and private development.
- Leverage ongoing partnerships between institutions, entrepreneurs, municipalities, and the community.
Rail-Volution
Building Livable Communities with Transit

220 King St. W.
The Storefront

Central Transit Corridor
Community Building Strategy
Moving People, Building Communities

Photo by Urban Strategies Inc.
COMMUNITY BUILDING OPPORTUNITIES

- Enhancing Mobility
- Creating High Quality Urban Places
- Strengthening the Employment Opportunity
- Enhancing the Learning Experience
- A Healthy, Inclusive Community
- Greening the Corridor
- Creating a Great Place to Visit
The Community Building Strategy is a strategy that will help shape how our community is planned and built around rapid transit.
Parking
Transit Connections
Tourism
Station Area Plans
Thank you

BSchlenvogt@RegionofWaterloo.ca

www.centraltransitcorridor.ca